The /// Manifesto
Excerpted from COMPUSERVE

DECLARATION OF /// INDEPENDANCE

When in the course of electronic events it becomes necessary for one computer to disassociate itself from others, let it be said that we hold these truths to be self-evident:

That all computers are not created equal;
That the /// was endowed by it's creators with powers that make it the most superior micro on the market;

That SOS is light-years ahead of it's brethern, and to the beings of the Dark Power, IBM;

That /// owners know a deal when they see one.

We hold that the High King of Apple has committed grievous injuries against the /// and it's owners:

He hath buried the /// with malice, and did advertise and promote it never;

He hath ignored the pleas of ///rs, being wrapped up in his own agendas, and did TAX our patience;

He hath taken our money, knowing full well of his plans for the ///;

He hath placed a new governor at the helm, one MacIntosh, without the approval of the people, and did advise us if we did not like it to buy one of his brethern;

He hath not keepst his ear to the market place, his eye on the stock exchange, and lo! our investments did plumelet;

He did winneth the battle for control, and hath lost
the war of the marketplace.

THEREFORE, we hereby declare the independent state of the ///.

Let Apple mindth it's business, and we ours. Let them keep their]['s, their Mac, for they are Alien beings. To this end we pledge our minds, our time and our sacred checkbooks.

Done, Guys.
